It's not often that trash gets a massive amount of positive attention , but a relatively new re-use group, called Freecycle, has gained the admiration of people inside and outside the waste industry. The Tucson, Ariz. – based group aims to keep items out of landfills by offering a forum through which people can get rid of their unwanted items – for free.

The group works through locally based e-mail lists – sometimes more than one per metro area- where members can post e-mails offering their unwanted items and other members can respond to offers. Members are free to choose which respondent they want to give their items to.

Most re-use programs are limited to a certain geographical area, but Freecycle allows any metropolitan area to create its own affiliated group. Since its formation in May 2003, the network has grown to 2, 383 groups in 50 states and several foreign countries for a total of 950,000 members. Its growth has been astounding, says Freecycle Founder Deron Beal. "We have grown by 100,000 members in the past week. We have had 2,300 percent growth in the past six months", he says. He expects to have millions of members within a few months.

Beal says he is happy about the group's success and not just about diverting so much would-be trash from landfills. "It's all about the cycle of giving and Freecycle is like meta-charity", he says. "It's everybody helping everybody. The humblest of us can become a philanthropist." (Waste Age Magazine-www.wasteage.com)
